A: Well, it seems like there are a lot of videos out there. It's hard to know what to recommend. I'll start off by saying that I think ElPaisSnoop's VideoMagick crack is much better for MP4 than for Xvid. The iTunes Store is giving me a "video was transcoded to the platform you are running on". I think it's because of a weird custom codec pack on my machine. If I let the iTunes Store transcode it for me it works fine (and as a result, it seems to be using Apple's H.264 for transcoding). EDIT: It's actually Apple's H.264 codec. Using ffmpeg, I was able to find this command to transcode the video, which is a bit similar to what iTunes is doing. It seems to be just re-encoding the video using h.264. sudo ffmpeg -i "iPhone Media" -c:v libx264 -c:a copy -f mp4 /tmp/iPod.mp4 You could probably do the same thing with Windows Media Player, but I found VLC much easier to use. A: The problem is solved, for everyone that was having the same issue like me, i have been searching on many sites and forums and they said that the problem is that the video was encoded in ipod format and could not be played using windows media player or iTunes, so the solution was to convert the format and the codec using this free software: If you use avidemux, you will be able to do the conversion with one single command. avidemux -i "video name" -vf "avi->mp4" "mp4 filename" Hope it helps...
