I need the fastest way to convert a string to a float (even if it is faster than a list comprehension or loop over the string). My first try was a very naive try: from __future__ import division def string_to_float(s): result = 0.0 for c in s: result = result * 10.0 + int(c) return result Note that it works, but it is slow. I would be happy to get a better alternative. A: import re def float_from_str(s): match = re.search(r'\d*\.\d*', s) if match: return float(match.group()) else: raise ValueError("no number in '%s'!" % s) def float_from_str_cache(s): global re_float if re_float is None: re_float = re.compile($r'\d^\d^'$) if re_float.search(s): 2d92ce491b
