A: There was a bit of chatter going on in the comments, so I wanted to add some clarity. I don't think any of the discussion here has any bearing on whether your META needs to be in your HTTP root. For all intents and purposes, the tag can be anywhere in the HTTP root, so long as it is at the beginning of the list. There is no META declaration header. The next thing to consider is the name of the META tag. You can actually name it whatever you want, so long as you adhere to the HTTP standard. So if you are planning on making META accessible from any web page and you name it the same as the location of that content, then that shouldn't be an issue. META name="generator" content="" So as long as the above is in your HTTP root, which is an META tag, then you should be in good shape. I did find this resource which will help you out. It seems to think that your META declaration should be the first thing in your HTTP root: Even though I think that is still premature, as there is no publically available API or W3C draft that says anything like that. So the final comment is: There is nothing "incorrect" with how you are structuring your META information. You should be able to put it wherever you like so long as it is valid. Synergistic actions of synthetic cannabinoid CP-55,940 and Δ9-THC on guinea pig diaphragm muscle. In this study, the authors evaluated the effects of cannabinoids on force and motility of isolated guinea pig diaphragm muscle using organ bath techniques. The authors also assessed the effects of combined administration of synthetic cannabinoids, N-(1-naphthyl)-5-(2-phenyl-1H-pyrazol-3-yl)pyridin-3-amine (WIN 55,212-2), N-(1-naphthyl)-[1-methoxy-2-phenyl)ethyl] amine (HU-211), and cannabidiol (CBD), with 2.5 or 5 μM
