There is controversy regarding the relationship between physical activity (PA) and risk of hypertension and cardiovascular diseases (CVD). We conducted a systematic review and meta-analysis of prospective cohort studies to assess the association between PA and risk of hypertension and CVD. Eight databases were searched up to 10 November 2014, with no language restrictions. Prospective cohort studies evaluating PA and risk of hypertension and/or CVD were included. Studies that had participants younger than 20 years, participants with dementia, participants with any type of cancer, or participants diagnosed with heart failure, left ventricular hypertrophy or ischaemic heart disease were excluded. Two investigators independently screened titles and abstracts, extracted data, assessed methodological quality, and carried out risk of bias assessments. A random-effects model was used to calculate pooled estimates and two-sided t-tests to assess statistical significance of the pooled estimate. Seventy-seven studies were identified, and a total of 29 were included in the meta-analyses. The pooled hazard ratio (95% confidence interval) for hypertension was 0.94 (0.91-0.98), for CVD was 0.91 (0.89-0.93) and for both outcomes combined was 0.89 (0.86-0.91) comparing the highest to the lowest categories of PA. The risk of hypertension and CVD decreased 1 % and 3 % per 10 min/day of leisure-time PA and 3 % and 6 % per 10-20 min/day of work-time PA, respectively, and there was a dose-response relationship between increasing PA intensity and reduced risk. This meta-analysis of prospective cohort studies indicates that higher levels of PA, particularly of longer duration and higher intensity, are associated with a reduced risk of hypertension and CVD. Astro: Astro is an album by Jethro Tull. It was released in 1974. It is the only album by Jethro Tull to feature the complete lineup of the band, with Ian Anderson, Martin Barre, Dave Pegg and John Evan. This lineup is the same as that of the band's lineup that recorded the previous album Too Old to Rock ba244e880a
