The temporary suspension of an Indigenous activist who is challenging the construction of the Coastal GasLink pipeline has been lifted after a new round of talks, according to a statement issued late Thursday. In a statement issued Thursday evening, the Wet'suwet'en Nation — who have long blocked access to the construction site in an isolated area of central B.C. — said a member of the Sini'sina'at Nation has agreed to leave the area. "This is the first time in history a member of our Nation has agreed to leave our land and territories and we are grateful," the statement said. It's the first time since the dispute began Jan. 22 that the Coastal GasLink, which is building a 670-kilometre pipeline to transport fracked gas from Dawson Creek, B.C., to the Kitimat LNG Canada export facility, has agreed to temporarily suspend construction.
