For Raspberry PI users, the JRE installed in the system is sufficient for running Java apps. The purpose of this project is to determine the characteristics of the brain stem mechanisms responsible for the regulation of respiratory and cardiovascular activity. The responses of medullary respiratory neurons and cardiovascular neurons to hypoxia are being studied in preparations of brain stem from the hypoglossal, hypoglossal, dorsal respiratory group, dorsal vagal, nucleus ambiguus, and locus coeruleus regions. The cellular responses to hypoxia and hypocapnia are being studied.

Hypoxia produces a reduction in activity in almost all medullary respiratory neurons, while hypocapnia, at least in the dorsal vagal area, causes a rise in respiratory activity. In the dorsal vagal and nucleus ambiguus regions, hypocapnia can produce an elevation in respiratory activity that exceeds the level that would be expected from the direct depressant effect of CO<sub>2</sub> on respiration. The effect of hypocapnia on single-unit activities is being studied in the dorsal vagal region. The responses of medullary cardiovascular neurons to hypoxia are also being studied. In the majority of these cells, hypoxia results in a rise in activity. The pattern of responses is determined by the cellular location and the region of the brain stem from
