What's New in the?

Strap on your headphones and get ready to rock! The world's first full-length virtual guitar is here! Grab it and play your way to a slew of new music tracks in minutes. Advertisement February 5, 2019 A company can exist for many reasons, but for Abhilash Kumar, CEO of avant-garde online-music startup Saavn, it was because of music. Starting out as a guitarist in college, Kumar says he started learning music theory, and eventually started composing songs with close friends in the US. "There were three people playing electric guitars, and I told them, "You guys are doing a really good job; keep it up. If you want to compete with the big music companies, we need to have songs that we can put on our own website." We just had no idea what that meant," he said. Thus was born Saavn, a music service that offered a cut-and-paste service to songwriters. They could record their tracks, upload them to Saavn, then choose one of the hundreds of pre-composed tracks to use as the basis of their song. "It's a lot more economical, and a lot more efficient," Kumar says. The idea quickly caught on, and by 2016, they had recorded 15,000 songs on Saavn. In 2018, the company expanded to other genres: they started featuring instrumental tracks as well, and a version of the popular game Fortnite. "We said, "Let's just have an offline version of the game where you can play on your own, and if you want to, you can get some new music to listen to as you play." Within a couple months, we had 2.5 million Fortnite players," Kumar said. Today, Saavn has an average of 10 million users a month, with more than 200,000 active songwriters and an average of 50 million minutes of listening per day. Like it or not, the market is changing. Streaming services such as Spotify and Apple Music are slowly gaining popularity and claiming more and more listeners. Many people use such services as a supplement to their existing music collection rather than as replacements for it. "The thing that they do is allow you to listen to music that you would not have listened to when you were offline. So, while you may not have wanted to listen to it before, you can now," Kumar says. "For a lot of people, it's a choice between having their CD collection, and having music that is always on. Spotify and Apple Music are definitely choices for those." And they offer an alternative to radio, which Kumar says can be "boring". "Radio doesn't give you a lot of context," he says. "You can't tell what kind of mood you're in and if it'll be a
