destruction of the immune system, particularly of CD4+ T-cells, with attendant susceptibility to opportunistic infections or neoplasms. HIV enters cells by binding with the CD4 receptor site on the cell surface, after which a conformational change is induced in the receptor-binding region of the envelope protein. This allows fusion of the viral and cell membranes. HIV infection also occurs through engagement of the CXCR4 or CCR5 co-receptor.

HIV infection is characterized by an absence of overt signs of cytopathology and by persistent low-level virus replication that is not directly cytopathic, but is rather intrinsically cytotoxic to the cells and tissue compartment in which it persists. The pathological effects of HIV infection result from this persistent virus replication not
