Q: How to connect the two circles by the lines which have different colors I would like to create a picture like this: I drew the red and blue circles. I connect them by a blue line. I draw a red line from the center of the right circle. The line goes into the left circle. Then I draw a blue line from the right circle center to the left circle center. I need to connect the two circles by the two lines which have different colors. How can I connect the two circles by the lines which have different colors? I tried to do it manually, but I am confused when the line intersects with a circle.

A: You could use the following approach: select the red line. Shift + drag in the 3D viewport, or click the shift arrow in the 3D viewport, to rotate it horizontally, then drag it to the blue line. unselect the red line. delete it. select the blue line and use the Add Spline Curve option in the 3D viewport to connect the two circles. The result is: A bill in the Ohio legislature would require that all teachers in the state be credentialed, regardless of which district they teach in. “[H]ow many of you are ready for another class of very talented, experienced, qualified teachers to join your staff, only to find they don’t meet the credentialing requirements for one of your school districts?” a bill’s sponsor, Sen. Barbara Sears (D-Sylvania), told her colleagues in a Jan. 7 hearing. The bill, called the Local District Credentialing of Teachers Act, would require that educators have a state teacher’s license (either before or after July 1, 2017) as well as a valid Ohio teacher’s license, which the state has not required for the last four years. A teacher

Archive for April, 2011 So, there I was last Sunday. You know, one of those Sundays where nothing much happens. I get up in the morning. I see my son. He’s taking a shower. I go downstairs to make breakfast, and he’s done it. I’m making a grocery list. He's done that. I'm putting away stuff in the kitchen, and he's done that. I'm getting ready to take him to church. He's ready. I go downstairs, and he's walking out the door. Then he gets in the car and heads out. He's buckled up. He's strapped on his helmet. He's ready. I take him to church. Then I go to work. I'm doing the same things for myself. I'm doing the same things for the business. I'm doing the same things for my children. You see, it's all in that cycle of going through the motions. It's all in the cycles of going through the motions. I just left a restaurant that had been known for its Sunday brunch. I've been to this restaurant many times before, but this was the first time I was there after attending an 8:00 service on Sunday morning.
