Manage your assets with ease! ... the help page). I think it has something to do with the list field in my template, since its designed to only display the names of the people who are logged in. So if I add this to my template file: [NAME] it works, but that isn't really what I want to do since it will display the name of everyone on the site, and I need to only display the names of the people who are currently logged in. My main issue comes from the list field. That's what I can't work out how to get it to be ignored so that it only displays the names of the people currently logged in. It might help if I could get a basic idea of what I'm trying to do. Would I have to make a custom input form and then parse the user's name in the database, check if the user's name is in the database and then print out their name? Would I have to somehow get the username of the logged in user, go to the database and return just their name in order to get the list field to ignore their name? Is there another way to do it? I'm totally new to PHP and Codeigniter, and I can only barely get my head around MVC. But any help or ideas would be greatly appreciated! Many thanks. A: A simple change to your template should work. I believe it will check to see if the user is logged in (probably in the CodeIgniter session) and then show their name. session->userdata('login');?>"> [NAME] #define VMG_SIZE 0x10 #define VMG_COHERENCE_SIZE 0x40 #define VMG_STACK_SIZE
