1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a CMOS image sensor and an electronic device. 2. Description of the Related Art In recent years, a CMOS image sensor, which is a kind of image sensor, is used for a digital camera, a digital video camera and the like. In the CMOS image sensor, an active pixel sensor (hereinafter, referred to as an APS) in which photo-charges generated by light receiving pixels are transferred by a floating diffusion region is known (for example, refer to Jpn. Pat. Appln. KOKAI Publication No. 2006-133634). In the CMOS image sensor, accumulation of signals from the active pixels is carried out while switching a signal charge read line and a reset line that supply electrical charge to the floating diffusion region and each of the active pixels. Then, in a line scan order, as the accumulated signals are sequentially read, the signals are sequentially stored and temporarily accumulated in a signal storage region provided outside the floating diffusion region. In this way, a chip capacity necessary for operation of the CMOS image sensor is small and signal charge read out as time series data can be dealt with by a signal processing circuit. Thus, reduction in size and power consumption of the CMOS image sensor can be achieved and high-speed driving can also be accomplished.Archive for April, 2011 There's a pattern here! I've just got to blame the move to the other side of the country. I have two cats: Oscar and Ollie (Ollie prefers to lie in my lap when I work. He's a snuggler. Oscar is...well, he's a lap cat, too, but he does have some...ahem...physical traits, but otherwise they're both pretty cuddly. I meant to post on this blog earlier, but I've been traveling most of the time lately. I came back to find that the blog had been extended and it now starts at the beginning of the year and goes to the present day. I am glad I don't have to start where I began with the beginning of this year, because it is so much harder! From today's post on: I was pleased to receive this critique from my husband, although he may have known that before he

Q: SQL Server Data Type Conversion Error to Currency I've been using this query to convert decimal to currency in my project: select CAST(ROUND(cast(99.99 as decimal) / 100.0), 2) as varchar(15)) After getting some very large numbers (like 453553504.9) I'm getting this error: Operand data type float is invalid for divison operator. Can anyone tell what is wrong with this query? What would be the best way to perform currency conversion? A: According to MSDN, the division operator returns a float. In a comment to this answer, you mentioned that your data type was float. In that case, you are right and the error message is telling you that the operator would require a decimal. I would suggest dropping the casting: select CAST((ROUND((CAST(99.99 as decimal) / 100.0), 2)) AS varchar(15)) When your data type is float, you are converting it to a float, which is being divided by 100.0. The result of this is going to be a float, which is being rounded to two decimals. This is why you are getting 453553504.9, and the conversion tells you that it can not handle such a large value. When your data type is a decimal, you are directly converting it to a decimal, which is then being divided by 100.0. This is the same as in the first case, only with a decimal instead of a float. If your data type is decimal, you do not have to cast it to anything, it." "Oh, my God, you're here." "I think I had a dream." "I just really wanted to see you." "Anyways, I've been thinking that we should work together again." "The problem with that... you're a philosopher and I'm a writer." "We just don't mesh." "Plus, I don't think I can handle your bitchy humor any longer." "You are not going to write about me, okay?" "I'm off-limits." "I've been flirting
