Technical Field The present invention relates to a method for improving the quality of an image including a noise reduction method and an image processing apparatus. Related Art As to the technique for reducing noise, there has been known the method that reduces noise by applying a noise reduction process to a plurality of images obtained by performing photographing while an imaging device moves, as described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2006-221496. Also, as described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2007-272712, there has been known the technique that removes noise from image data by applying a noise reduction process that is suitable for each different pixel of image data, in addition to the technique that removes noise by applying a noise reduction process to the entire image. Meanwhile, in the method described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2006-221496, the noise reduction process is not performed on image data with a subject that partially overlaps with a noise reduction target object, but this is not the case in the method described in Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2007-272712. Therefore, according to Japanese Patent Application Laid-Open Publication No. 2007-272712, the technique for improving the quality of an image including a noise reduction process can be effectively applied to a subject that partially overlaps with a noise reduction target object.What Up, N.L.? The spring weather here has put N.L. wildlife back on the move. As the harsh Alberta winter subsides, bears, otters, and most importantly, the invasive Asian clamshell clam known as blue mussels, are migrating north for the summer. Alberta's Saskatchewan and Manitoba neighbours, however, are not completely unaffected by the cold. For example, the winter of 2010-11 in much of Central and Northern Saskatchewan was very unusual. According to Jerry Marks, a research fishery scientist for the DFO's Invasive Species Branch, this weather resulted in a severe over-wintering of the Asian clamshell clam in parts of Saskatchewan. This particular clam grows on wet shorelines, and is commonly seen in the lakes, ponds, and marshes of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Before the winter, it did not spread very far in these regions, but this past winter – unusually warm and wet – opened up the clamshell clam's early-detection possibilities for those who attend shoreline inspections. As always, people
