"The economy is improving and our rating on the U.S. Treasury is based on our expectation of continued progress toward full employment and rising per capita income," the agency said in a statement. "We believe that the risks to the U.S. rating are to the upside, not to the downside." The world's largest economy is growing stronger as the effects of a slump in business spending on consumer spending begin to fade. The recent expansion has been modest and weak job gains have limited wage pressures and inflation. However, economic growth is expected to pick up this year, and consumer spending is expected to grow at a healthy clip. The S&P agency said it expects the economy to grow by 2.5 percent in 2013 and 2.9 percent in 2014. "The U.S. Treasury is getting a rating upgrade from S&P because the economy is getting better, not because it has lowered its spending," said Michael Feroli, a senior U.S. economist at JPMorgan Chase. The rating agency also cited U.S. growth as a reason it upgraded its outlook for Japan from negative to stable. S&P said it expects Japan's growth to improve this year as it adds to an improved fiscal position and an environment that will allow policymakers to pursue structural reforms to spur higher growth in the medium term. The U.S. economy is increasingly driven by consumer spending and exports, as well as investment spending from businesses and the federal government. In Japan, growth is heavily reliant on government spending and exports. The S&P credit ratings agency cited strong debt dynamics as one factor leading to positive ratings for some of Japan's major banks and companies, including Bank of America and Toshiba Corp. both

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for reproducing information from a recording medium in a recording/reproducing apparatus in which a tape having a transparent magnetic layer has been loaded as a recording medium. 2. Description of the Related Art In a conventional apparatus for reproducing information from a recording medium, such as a cassette tape, a tape winding method by a VTR or the like is adopted. However, the conventional reproduction method by a VTR is an effective method for reproducing information from a video tape used for broadcasting. However, for a recording medium having a magnetic layer capable of being written and erased by a low-frequency magnetic field, the method is not an effective reproduction method, and information cannot be reproduced. In order to improve the above method, a magnetic tape, in which a transparent magnetic layer is laminated on a transparent plastic film, has been developed. In the case of a magnetic tape having a magnetic layer of this type, information is written in the magnetic layer by a magnetic field of a high frequency, and the information is read with a conventional video tape. However, the conventional method has problems in that it takes a long time to write information, a large-sized apparatus is required for the writing operation, and the medium is expensive.
