Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to an apparatus and method of using the apparatus to extract a file from a file system in a computer system and, more particularly, to a file recovery apparatus and method of using the apparatus to extract a file from a file system in a computer system using a file name. 2.
Background of the Invention It is not uncommon to take files or other information from various sources in a computer system. In most cases, in order to access the information, a user is required to know the name or location of the file, or at least have the means to locate the file. While this method generally works well, there are some instances where the user may accidentally delete or move the file and not have access to the file. In this case, the user has to go through all of the file directories in the computer until the file is found. This becomes a tedious process if a number of files have been deleted. Prior art systems have provided computer systems with a function for recovering files. In the prior art, a computer system provides a function whereby if there is a need for recovery of a file, a file recovery system restores the lost file. If a file is deleted or lost, the file recovery system searches the memory to find files which are similar to the deleted file. When the file is found, the file recovery system copies the file to a new location where the new file can be used. The new location is usually designated in the file system to which the lost file belonged to. This process typically can be used to restore a file with a similar name that is deleted. In the prior art, the computer system searches a memory or hard disk to recover a file. When a file is deleted, the computer system must search the memory or hard disk and determine whether there is a duplicate file. The files matching the search criterion are then selected to be restored to a new location designated in the file system to which the lost file belonged to. In some prior art systems, the files matching the search criterion are restored to the original location if there is no empty slot in the designated location of the file system. To the extent that the prior art systems attempt to recover a lost file, the prior art systems are based on the data in the file itself, or on the data stored in a directory. Accordingly, the prior art systems can only search a memory or hard disk for a
