The company is headquartered in Greensboro, North Carolina and is owned by Danaher Corporation. It provides networking, colocation, and fiber solution services. History EDC was founded in 1976 in the United States by Jon Mardenborough, a 32-year-old former University of North Carolina undergrad and military student. In the early 1990s, it grew quickly through acquisitions and made a large acquisition of three European firms. This was the largest foreign acquisitions in the history of EDC. To this day, 30% of its business is foreign. Its foreign focus has been driven by the explosive growth of the Internet, and due to the presence of large global service providers in its existing European customer base. In 1995, John R. Ellis Jr. became CEO and EDC acquired UK-based Compact Networks. In 1998, EDC acquired MacKenzie. Its network and colocation services were focused on companies that sold services to businesses. The company specialized in cloud and virtualization services. In 2006, EDC acquired TNK Partners, a French colocation company, for its fiber business. In February 2010, EDC agreed to pay $490 million to acquire privately held Newegg. In September 2010, EDC announced that it would acquire Hypergate, a UK-based managed network services provider. This acquisition was for its reseller and cloud business, which included NSN, ReCharge, and EMCS, and this was the company's largest acquisition. In October 2012, Danaher Corporation purchased EDC. At the time of the acquisition, EDC had sales of $900 million and 300 employees.
